

Greens candidate announced for Southern Downs

13th January 2015

Elizabeth Ure, resident of Warwick, has been announced as the official Greens candidate for the Southern Downs and will be standing against Lawrence Springborg, the current member.

Elizabeth, well known in the community for her strong commitment to the region and its people says that she is very proud to be representing the Greens and will be presenting policies to the voters that reflect her passion for the land, water, and the living standards of the people in her Southern Downs electorate.

Elizabeth has a wealth of experience being a mother, business woman, community organiser, and a determined social campaigner.

Ms Ure sees issues such as declining health care services, water quality and availability, declining employment opportunities, the intrusion of unrestricted mining and CSG against the wishes of residents, the need to prepare for climate change, affordable education, and support for the farming community as the key issues she will be addressing.

“A vote for me as a Greens candidate is a vote for the protection of the Southern Downs and its people and I will never take that vote for granted.”

Ms Ure, who will be based at an office in Warwick, plans to campaign throughout the electorate and will be visiting all major centres leading up to the election.

Her web site is at www.greensforsoutherndowns.com.au and she invites all voters to visit the site and make comments so as to help her better understand the particular needs of our electorate.

Elizabeth said she is both excited and nervous about this candidacy and decided to run because she wanted to make a difference to the communities in the Southern Downs and firmly believes in the principle that every individual can make a difference to our future.
